Lurking is allowed/ commenting is encouraged

We would like to take the opportunity to thank the members of the community who have contributed to the growing success of the Whitestown blog.

We started this blog as a means by which to communicate views, opinions, and ideas which would also serve as a means of communication and information exchange within our community. We have not been disappointed with the result. Many members of the community have used this new resource for that exact purpose. Many of you have posted your comments and many more simply read the blog in order to learn the views and opinions of your neighbors in order to become more informed, including some elected officials around the county. This is your community and your opinions matter. The greater the input, the more suitable the solution.

This is your blog. It is intended to address issues that concern Whitestown, as well as Worth Township . We have, and will continue to accept requests to start new topics. The only complaint that we have at this time is that a majority of the comments are posted as anonymous. We would like to see more members of the community take credit for their comments and sign their name, but will still gladly accept anonymous comments. Change can be good, but it takes new ideas and input, make it yours.

We will continue to review each new comment for inappropriate content before allowing it to post to the blog, and all current disclaimers posted on the blog will remain in effect.

Remember, even if you whole heartedly agree with a certain position, it is always good to consider the opposing views. There is a little "Devil's advocate" in each of us, use it wisely!

Thank you for your continued support, and we look forward to your comments.

Blogging for a better community,
